"Being recognized by Forbes as the best place to work across all of retail is extremely exciting, and as a team, there's so much to look forward to. Our engine of growth is fueled by amazing and ambitious people who all share the same values and commitment to our customers, who bring boundless energy and discipline, who feel like they're part of something, who have chosen to care a little more than most, who learn and get a little better every day, and who have fun along the way," says Ernie Garcia, Carvana founder and CEO. "It's why we emphasize a company-wide view on the total wellness of every team member to ensure a supportive and fulfilling experience across all lifestyles and needs."

Carvana takes care of its people, so they can in turn take the best possible care of its customers, driving them happy through their car shopping, buying or selling experience. Carvana goes the extra mile to recruit and retain team members seeking a career, not just a job. It has reimagined its comprehensive employee experience in the job market of the future that extends to brand meaning and quality of life for team members. The approach considers mental wellbeing, financial security and literacy, physical health, educational opportunities, and examples include Carvana Communities resource groups, Carvana Cares community impact, sweat-equity Passion Projects, career development, rotational programs, on-the-job training certifications and more. Carvana team members enjoy a variety of values-based benefits and perks, each designed to promote a deeper, more connective company culture.

Founder-led Carvana brings people-first values, an unwavering pursuit of customer dedication and innovation that has fueled its growth as the second largest used automotive retailer in the U.S. and one of the fastest companies to debut on the Fortune 500, while setting a new automotive retail standard for how customers should be treated: with care, honesty and respect. Carvana has improved the way people buy – and sell – cars, demonstrated by its industry-leading Net Promoter Score (NPS) and 4.7 out of five star customer experience rating average, and it continues to grow, now serving more than 80% of the U.S. population.

Carvana has corporate locations in Tempe, Los Angeles, Atlanta and the Bay Area. It also has several Inspection and Reconditioning Centers, patented Car Vending Machines, and hubs throughout the United States.
